Homeschool – Student Performance Procedures

November 1, 2024

Students who are enrolled in a home school program will be administered standardized tests which will measure the student's performance. The below consultations will be required between the student and the home school parent(s)/guardian(s) if:

1. The home school student falls three (3) to six (6) months behind the home school student's appropriate grade level based on the results of the standardized test;
2. The home school student falls six (6) to nine (9) months behind the home school student's appropriate grade level in the home school student's reading, language arts, mathematics, or science test scores or such of these areas, regardless of the term used on the test, as are actually tested for the student's grade level based on the results of the standardized test; or
3. The home school student falls more than one (1) year behind the home school student's appropriate grade level in the home school student's comprehensive test score for two (2) consecutive tests based on the results of the standardized test and if the child does not have a learning disability in the opinion of a teacher licensed to teach at the child's grade level.

Based on the results of the standardized tests and the subjects deemed behind in, the parent(s)/guardian(s) will be responsible with consulting with a teacher licensed by the State Board of Education and having a certificate or endorsement in the grade level, course, or subject matter in which consultation is sought.

The parent(s)/guardian(s) and teacher will then design a remedial course to help the child obtain the child's appropriate grade level. The parent(s)/guardian(s) shall notify the Director of Schools/designee of the plan of action.

Depending on the circumstances, the parent(s)/guardian(s) may be required to enroll the child in a public, private, or church-related school.
